	Teaming as an active process. In an increasingly complex and fluid environment the value of reaching across boundaries to make decisions, drive change and innovate requires new levels of collaboration or "teaming." What are the qualities that lead to effective teaming within an organization? across a global divide? in the face of a societal challenge? Can "teaming" work to break log jams and lead to innovation?

	Shared Measurement as a Driver of Collaborative Change. The right metrics can lead change while the wrong ones can derail efforts. Does the GDP of a nation reflect access to health services within its population? Do measures of innovation indicate advances to humanity or the opening of new fast food franchises? How do we define metrics that enable the measure of progress (or lack thereof) and support a broad agenda for change?
